The workshop was part of the conference Volunteering as a tool for change, which took place on 17 October 2023 in Poprad, Slovakia.

The event was attended by 85 people, pupils, teachers and youth workers.

The goal of the conference was to present the possibilities of connecting formal and non-formal education through education for volunteering using the service learning strategy.

During the conference, a panel discussion took place, in which a student, a primary school teacher, a university pedagogue preparing future teachers, a researcher in the field of youth work and a representative of the Ministry of Education spoke. The panel discussion participants talked about the values that young people live by, how they coincide with EU values, what are the trends among young people and how we can respond to them from the position of stakeholders or youth workers in formal or informal education.

The panelists also answered questions from the audience.

The panel discussion was followed by work in groups, where successful examples of engaged students' projects were presented in a facilitated discussion. The projects were implemented by students, in cooperation between schools and communities. In the projects, the main theme was engagement and interest in the neighborhood in which I live.

After the event, together with a thank you email, the participants also received an invitation to evaluate the event via the EU Survey.
